Why a Resource Guide for Suicide Prevention Training is Critical

Suicide is a critical public health problem; however, suicides are preventable with timely, evidence-based and often low-cost interventions (WHO, 2021). More than 50% of Americans have been affected by suicide in some way, and it continues to impact all age groups from children to older adults. According to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention (AFSP), suicide is the 12th leading cause of death in the United States, and the 3rd leading cause of death for youth between the ages 10-19. With the advent of COVID-19 and its impact on work, food scarcity, and disruption to family dynamics; coupled with the universal impact on mental health, experts predict the number of affected individuals will continue to rise in the coming years. Yet, despite such grim statistics, THERE IS HOPE. In fact, according to a nationwide study, 94% of adults in the U.S. think suicide can be prevented (AFSP, 2024).

Both risk and protective factors exist for suicide. In assessing the possibility of suicide, it is pertinent to look at both risk factors (aspects that can increase the potential of risk for suicide) as well as protective factors (those aspects that may help to reduce the risk for suicide). Risk factors include feelings of anxiety, depression, hopelessness, lack of coping and problem-solving skills, stress, and identifying as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, or queer (LGBTQ) (Jacobs, 2006). Depression, anxiety, and hopelessness are correlated with difficulty concentrating, social isolation, decreased academic performance, and sleeping and eating disturbances (John Hopkins University, 2013). Protective factors contribute to a decreased risk of suicide and include effective mental health resources, feelings of connectedness to individuals, family, community, and networks, quality problem-solving skills, and open communication with parents and caregivers (Suicide Prevention Resource Center [SPRC]). School settings provide a unique platform to increase protective factors by advocating for the mental and emotional health of students, specifically suicide awareness. However, many students and teachers have not received adequate mental health training (Jacobs 2006); thus, there is a need to incorporate mental health activities, particularly focusing on suicide prevention, into the school setting. In addition to school settings, families play a huge role as a protective factor in suicide prevention. The need for family training, intervention, and capacity building has never been greater than now. Community partners can help enhance protective factors in both school and family settings.

Suicide is preventable and we must all play our part in creating healthy and strong individuals, families, and communities (CDC 2021). One way that we can do that is to increase public awareness by providing education on suicide, and to simultaneously work to reduce the stigma surrounding mental health and suicide. BC SAFE is dedicated to achieving that goal. As a local suicide prevention coalition, our mission is to reduce the number of suicides and suicide attempts in our community. To achieve this, our coalition members have constructed this repository of workshops and suicide prevention resources for your reference and use. As always, if you or someone you know are in crisis, please call or text the 988 Suicide and Crisis Lifeline at 988. Resources are available 24/7/365.

American Foundation for Suicide Prevention (AFSP)	After a Suicide: A Toolkit for Schools If your school has lost someone to suicide, this toolkit offers best practices and practical tools to help schools in the aftermath of a suicide. In collaboration with the Suicide Prevention Resource Center, AFSP offers After a Suicide: A Toolkit for Schools to help schools respond in the aftermath of a suicide death. This newly revised resource (2018) provides information for school administrators and other school staff who wish to implement a coordinated response to the suicide. The toolkit provides information on how best to communicate and support the school community and manage the crisis response. Also found in the toolkit is information on helping students cope, communicating with parents, working with the community, and engaging external resources for support.
